Ratangad Fort Trek 2026 from ₹899 | Mumbai & Pune

1 night, 1 day

Overview

Ratangad Fort Trek

Ratan means jewel in Marathi, and Ratangad is exactly that — the crown jewel among the hill forts of the Sahyadri. Rising to a height of 4,255 feet above sea level in the Ahmednagar district of Maharashtra, Ratangad Fort is one of the most loved monsoon and winter treks near Mumbai and Pune, built over 400 years ago and once a stronghold of Chhatrapati Shivaji Maharaj.

The fort sits within the Ajoba mountain range, ringed by some of the tallest peaks in the Sahyadris — Kulang, Alang, Madan, Kalsubai (the highest peak in Maharashtra), Katrabai, Ajoba, and Ghanchakkar. Geographically, Ratangad stands on the banks of the Bhandardara lake, one of the oldest catchment areas in the region, which means almost every turn of the trail opens up to sweeping views of water, mist, and mountains. During the monsoon, the entire range disappears into rolling cloud and the Sahyadris look truly lost in time.

The Amruteshwar Temple at Ratanwadi

At the base of the fort, in the village of Ratanwadi, stands the ancient Amruteshwar Temple — a roughly 1,000-year-old shrine dedicated to Lord Shiva. Carved in the Hemadpanti style, the temple is a pinnacle of the stone architecture of our ancestors, and most trekkers stop here either before the climb or on the way back. It's one of the oldest surviving temples in the Sahyadri and a highlight of the trek in its own right.

What to expect on the trail

The Ratangad trek begins from Ratanwadi and winds through dense forest before opening onto rocky, terraced trails. The final stretch to the top is via a series of rock-cut steps and a famous iron ladder that takes you through the Trimbak Darwaja into the fort. Once on top, you'll find ancient water cisterns, the Rani Mahal ruins, and the natural rock formation known as Nedhe (the needle's eye) — a giant hole through the cliff that frames the surrounding peaks perfectly.

Ratangad in the monsoon

Monsoon is when Ratangad is at its most magical. From June onwards the slopes turn emerald green, seasonal waterfalls appear along the route, and a soft fog drifts across the fort all day. Between August and October, the hillside also bursts into bloom with yellow Sonki flowers, and once every seven years the rare purple Karvi flowers cover the fort — making it one of the best flower treks in Maharashtra.
